Sometimes modifiers can get lost or lose in a sentence. When that happens, things can get very confused! Keep reading for examples of this common grammatical error as well as a useful spreadsheet of diverted and incurring modifiers for extra practice. Bug mods and stunning examples of clumsy and stunning modifiers can be confusing, but they are easy to fix. The trick is to know what kind of modifier you are dealing with. This depends on the noun you are modifying and how close it is to your modifier. A lost modifier is in the wrong place. As a result, it seems to modify the wrong noun. Dislocated: The seller tried to sell a car to a client that was broken. (Broken down is the modifier, but because it is closer to the customer, it seems that the customer is broken instead of the car.) Correct. The seller tried to sell a broken car to a client. Dislocated: Mrs. Harris hung the lovely student's drawing on the wall. (Lovely must modify the drawing, but it seems that modifies the student instead.) Fixed: Mrs. Harris hung the student's beautiful drawing on the wall. Dislocated: We will adopt the animal shelter dog with black spots. (Placing the sentence with black spots after the shelter instead of the dog makes it look like the shelter has black spots.) Correct. We will adopt the dog with black spots from the animal shelter. A trace modifier modifies a noun or verb that never appears in the sentence. Fixing dangling modifiers require a little more editing than reorganizing words; you need to add the noun or verb the modifier is describing. Staff Writer Correcting Misplaced Modifiers Modifiers are words or phrases that provide additional detail about a subject, verb or object in a sentence. Modifiers can be words or phrases; for example, the word "pretty" can modify "girl," and the phrase "who was smart" can also modify "girl." According to the rules of grammar, modifiers should be placed as close as possible to the person or thing that they are modifying. When a modifier is not placed properly in the sentence, it can create confusion and is considered to be a "misplaced modifier."
